Touch Time & Expense 1.2.2

Apache Cordova Upgrade for Android

This release addresses the following security issues that affect several Android applications using the Apache Cordova framework.

- CVE-2014-3500

This is a Cross-Application Scripting (XAS) vulnerability, which could allow unauthorized users to obtain sensitive information remotely through their controlled URL. If you (as a target user) click the URL, the unauthorized users could run a script in your Web browser, allowing them to steal authentication credentials.

- CVE-2014-3501

This issue could allow unauthorized users to bypass security restrictions related to the use of URL whitelist when communication over non-HTTP channels. As a result, it could allow the unauthorized users to perform further threats on a target system.

- CVE-2014-3502

This issue could allow unauthorized users to manipulate HTML content of a Cordova application, allowing them to create links that open other applications and send arbitrary data to those applications.

Deltek strongly suggests that you upgrade to the latest Android application and install the latest Touch Server, which include these security patches from the vendors.

PHP Upgrade to Fix OpenSSL Security Issues

This release addresses a regression error in OpenSSL, which was introduced in PHP 5.5.17, and a version reporting error in Server 2012 R2. It also covers the fixes for the following security issues:

- CVE-2014-3668

- This is an out-of-bound vulnerability in mkgmtime() function, which is used to convert time information into calendar time. This issue could cause the PHP interpreter to crash.

- CVE-2014-3669

This is an integer overflow vulnerability in unserialize() function, which converts a serialized data to actual data. It could cause an affected application to crash or lead to disclosure of information. This issue only affects 32-bit systems.

▪ CVE-2014-3670

This is a heap corruption vulnerability affecting the exif-thumbnail() function, which is usually used to extract embedded thumbnails from various image formats. This issue could cause the PHP interpreter to crash or run random codes.

Deltek strongly suggests that you upgrade to the latest Android application and install the latest Touch Server, which include these security patches from the vendors.
